Fifteen-year-old Brydie is fascinated by a TV news story about a girl accused of a shocking act of violence. Is the accused a different kind of girl from Brydie and her friends?

Based on real events that took place in Vancouver in 1997, Joan MacLeod's bleakly funny, theatrical work delves into the minds of teenagers, their relationships and codes of behaviour.

Inspired by the real-life murder of 14-year-old Reena Virk by high school students, this moving, one-woman production tracks the superficial innocence of Brydie's childhood as she confronts teenage bullying and moves towards adult responsibility.

The Shape of a Girl offers a sobering glimpse into the tough and complicated terrain of the teenage world with profound insight.
